“One of the most powerful human documentaries I have ever seen, Education Under Fire is sure to galvanize viewers who will be exposed to an outrage that until now has received little attention — the systematic denial of an entire religious community of the right to pursue higher education in their own country.”

— Elise Auerbach, Iran Specialist for Amnesty International USA

In Iran today, citizens are deprived of a wide range of human rights — including the right to learn. Many young people are banned from college because of their political or religious views. The Education Under Fire campaign features a 30-minute film that documents the inspiring story of the Baha’i Institute for Higher Education, which seeks to address this injustice — followed by a panel discussion and audience conversation about the right to education.

Tuesday, 28 February 2012 — University of New Hampshire
MUB Theater II — 7-9 pm

Co-sponsors include the UNH EUF Committee, Amnesty International USA, the Center for International Education, the UNH Department of Education, and the Office of Multicultural Student Affairs (OMSA).

Panelists are scheduled to include Cynthia Gabriel Walsh, Northeast Field Organizer, Amnesty International USA; Brad Pokorny, Senior Information Officer, Bahá’í International Community; and Nima Mosammaparast, BIHE faculty member.
